Real income does not always create a visible financial profile

Formal credit histories

Many freelancers and small businesses have limited formal credit histories and fragmented records.

Scattered records

Income and transaction records can be scattered across different sources.

Manual recordkeeping

Manual recordkeeping makes business performance harder to understand.

Limited evidence

Limited financial evidence can make formal financing more difficult.

Problem Statements

SCENARIO A

Income is hard to prove

- The business earns money, but the records are incomplete.
- Banks may not see the full business activity.
- This can make financing applications harder.

SCENARIO B

Records are hard to manage

- Receipts, payment screenshots, and invoices are in different places.
- Owners cannot quickly see income, expenses, or cash flow.
- Preparing financial information takes too much time.

These are two connected challenges: limited proof of financial activity and limited visibility into that activity.
